THE CLODHOOPER AND THE BALD-HEADED MAN

A STIRRING TALE OF LOVE AND BUSINESS.

Written for the Record-Press by ROBERT C. HAYNES,
Author of "This Funny World," "Dark Days and Bright," Etc.

VIII.

Imogene, though so wrathful a moment before, When out on the street was her sweet self once more; So with leisurely foot-steps she started to go To her home, five blocks off, down on Middleton Row.

As she passed down the street where the men were at work, She smiled as the men shouted: "give us brick Turk!" But she passed on and by, and without any stop, And with only a bow to the man at the top.

"That's a sweet, noble girl," mused the man at the top, "I'll just bet she's been fired, and if so I'll not stop Till I've flogg'd that big, bandy-legged, bald-headed man Worse than Russia was flogg'd by the plucky Japan."

As still on down the street went the fair Imogene, She was met near her home by the hard-pounding Green. She gave him a nice, friendly bow and a smile, And the key-puncher's hat was raised up in good style.

"That's as noble a girl as I ever have seen, And I'll bet she's been fired," mused the hard-pounding Green, "Well there'll be something doing when I come across That great, gander-eyed gump of a bald-headed boss!"
